Have realistic expectations from your investments

TRUTH BE TOLD

HARSH ROONGTA

Kirti, a selector, wants to make money by backing a batsman based on his long-term performance. After scrutinising the statistics of several batsmen over a hundred matches, he decides on one. However, he gets upset when his chosen player doesn't perform well in the next match, and in fact the entire series. He overlooks the fact that the other batsmen have fared equally

hundred matches, Kirti's disappointment doesn't abate. He unrealistically expects the batsman he has backed to perform well every time, forgetting his initial strategy of backing a batsman based on his long-term performance.

Cut to investments. I narrated this imaginary story to our client Radha. She was going through the status report on her investments started six months ago. She expressed unhappiness at their rather low returns and enquired whether they needed to be replaced. I told her the performance statistics of her investments over six months were akin to data shown on the television screen while a match is going on — useful to know which way the match is going, but not useful for selecting a batsman.

Similarly, an investment's performance over six months is not a good basis for deciding to review the investments.

"Should we never review the performance of an investment then?" Radha asked.

"Of course, we should. But it needs to be based on its long-term performance data compared to peers. We had shown you data for the past 20 quarters for all the investments based on which this one was chosen. We have updated that data to reflect the quarters 21 and 22. The cumulative data from quarter 3 to quarter 22 continues to show the investment as among the top performers," I answered.

It was tough for Radha to understand why the investment status report was not a correct basis for reviewing her investments. But she had to agree in the face of the inexorable logic presented to her.

Radha said she now understood the difference between an investment status report and an investment review report. But what was the plan review document we were giving so much importance to? Again, using cricketing analogy, I explained: selecting a batsman based on his long-term performance (akin to investment review) is different from deciding the composition of the team — how many batsmen, all-rounders, bowlers, and the wicket-keeper.

risk-taking ability. An investment's Choosing the specific instruments or schemes within each performance is of these investment types based akin to data shown on a set of long-term criteria comes next. A good plan will also consider the physical and to know which way emotional health needs of the the match is going, individual (just as in cricket one looks at the physical and mental well-being of the players). The plan review looks at all these parameters to take a call on whether any one of them needs an adjustment. Thus, in descending order of importance and impact on the success of any plan would stand the initial plan and review, initial investment selection and review, and ongoing investment status reports.

My favourite maths teacher in school had once remarked, with a mischievous smile, "I want each one of you to score above average marks." This, of course, is a mathematical impossibility. Truth be told, it's important for investors to have realistic expectations from their investments, or else they are setting themselves up for disappointment.

Fractional ownership platforms make commercial realty accessible

Until Sebi's MSM REIT regulations come into force, investors should be aware that regulatory oversight of these platforms is weak

SANJAY KUMAR SINGH & KARTHIK JEROME

With the number of fractional ownership platforms (FOPs) and their assets under management growing, the Securities and Exchange Board of India (Sebi) has come out with a consultation paper that is a precursor to regulating them under the MSM (micro, small, medium) real estate investment trust (REIT) framework.

'The successful listing of commercial office REITs and recently of a retail REIT has given Sebi the confidence that such platforms, if regulated, will result in increased fund flows into real estate assets and enable retail participation," says Anuj Puri, chairman, ANAROCK Group.

How FOPs work

These platforms pool money from a number of investors and use it to buy commercial real estate. Investors hold a share of the asset and receive payouts from both rental returns and capital gains (when the building is sold).

These platforms charge 3-5 per cent fee at entry and an annual management fee of 1 per cent. Some also charge a performance fee (say, 15 per cent if the internal rate of return (IRR) crosses the hurdle rate of, say, 10 per cent).

Enable retail participation

FOPs make commercial real estate accessible to retail investors. "Many investors can come together and own a piece of a large asset that would otherwise be out of their reach," says Sudarshan Lodha, co-founder and chief executive officer (CEO), Strata. With an investment of ₹10-25 lakh, an investor could acquire a share in a building that costs hundreds of crore.

Promoters of these platforms say the rental return could be in the range of 8-9 per cent. Add the capital appreciation and the total IRR could rise to

"Since the building is leased via long-term contracts, and the investment is backed by a hard asset, the ciate, Pioneer Legal. Disclosure norms downside is protected," says Shiv

(Re in Lakhe)

WHAT SEBI'S PROPOSALS MEAN FOR INVESTORS

■ Fractional ownership platforms (FOPs) will have to register with Sebi; they will have to adhere to MSM REIT regulations

■ MSM REITs will have asset size between ₹25 crore and ₹500 crore

■ They will have to send half-yearly and annual reports to investors

■Valuation of assets will happen

The return is likely to be higher

Parekh informs that the building is

Lack of regulatory oversight

The primary risk in this mode of investment today is the absence of regulation. "Currently, the regulatory oversight over this sector is extremely limited," says Vedika Shah, senior asso■The assets will be held within a trust structure, with a designated trustee; assets will be handled by investment managers, chosen according to Sebi's criteria

■ Investors will have access to grievance-redress mechanism

managed by the FOP and the entire investment process is online, making it a hassle-free investment. He adds: "Since the investment is made in a ready building, there is no development or approval risk. Even the tenants are already in place, which mitigates vacancy risk," he adds.

are also not in place. "The nature of disclosures related to valuation of real estate, property title diligence, terms of lease, status of lease renewals, etc. to investors are inappropriate and limited," says Harish Kumar, partner, Luthra and Luthra Law Offices India.

Sometimes, FOPs are floated by agents registered with state Real Estate Regulatory Authority (RERA). "While these platforms could be partly complying with RERA norms, such registrations don't imply end-to-end regulation of their activities by RERA," says Vimal Nadar, head of research, Colliers India. Investors in many FOPs are considered as shareholders of a special purpose vehicle (SPV) which owns the asset. "Such SPVs require proper review, which may not be done currently by RERA," says Nadar. He adds that in other cases, the power of attornev (PoA) route is followed for owning assets, which is subject to misuse.

No proper mechanism for redress-

Investors could also face liquidity issues if they want to exit. "Since the units are unlisted, finding a buyer may not be easy," says Puri.

Do the due diligence

Before investing, an investor should evaluate the reputation of the platform and the expertise (including qualifications and experience) of the individuals running it. Parekh suggests checking how a platform's assets have performed in the past, and whether the management team is experienced at leasing and exiting properties.

Paplikar suggests going with a platform that has a competent team that understands the risk involved in the acquisition of a real estate asset, and is capable of handling them.

"If possible, connect with a few investors who have previously transacted on the platform to gain an understanding of its operating mechanism," says Puri.

Lodha suggests that investors should check to see if the platform has backing from institutional investors. He adds that investors should enter this investment avenue with at least a 7-10-year horizon.

If the FOP is registered as a private company, it would be required to file its books with the Ministry of Corporate Affairs (MCA). "Check those filings before investing," says Nadar.

How returns are taxed

Tax experts say there are no clear directions currently on how payouts from FOPs should be taxed. "Taxation will depend on how the ownership is structured," says Archit Gupta, founder and CEO. Clear.

"Where the ownership is structured in a way such that every investor is an owner and is mentioned in the property documents, rent income may be treated as interest and taxed at slab rates," says Gupta.

He further adds that when there is capital gain on the sale of a property, it would be treated as long-term capital gain and taxed at 20 per cent if the property has been held for two or more years. If it was held for less than two years, the gain would be taxed at slab rates applicable to the individual.

It was tough for Radha to understand why the investment status report was not a correct basis for reviewing her investments. But she had to agree in the face of the inexorable logic presented to her.

Radha said she now understood the difference between an investment status report and an investment review report. But what was the plan review document we were giving so much importance to? Again, using cricketing analogy, I explained: selecting a batsman based on his long-term performance (akin to investment review) is different from deciding the composition of the team — how many batsmen, all-rounders, bowlers, and the wicket-keeper.

Fractional ownership platforms make commercial realty accessible

Until Sebi's MSM REIT regulations come into force, investors should be aware that regulatory oversight of these platforms is weak

SANJAY KUMAR SINGH & KARTHIK JEROME

With the number of fractional ownership platforms (FOPs) and their assets under management growing, the Securities and Exchange Board of India (Sebi) has come out with a consultation paper that is a precursor to regulating them under the MSM (micro, small, medium) real estate investment trust (REIT) framework.

'The successful listing of commercial office REITs and recently of a retail REIT has given Sebi the confidence that such platforms, if regulated, will result in increased fund flows into real estate assets and enable retail participation," says Anuj Puri, chairman, ANAROCK Group.

These platforms pool money from a number of investors and use it to buy commercial real estate. Investors hold a share of the asset and receive payouts from both rental returns and capital gains (when the building is sold).

These platforms charge 3-5 per cent fee at entry and an annual management fee of 1 per cent. Some also charge a performance fee (say, 15 per cent if the internal rate of return (IRR) crosses the hurdle rate of, say, 10 per cent).

Enable retail participation

FOPs make commercial real estate accessible to retail investors. "Many investors can come together and own a piece of a large asset that would otherwise be out of their reach," says Sudarshan Lodha, co-founder and chief executive officer (CEO), Strata. With an investment of ₹10-25 lakh, an investor could acquire a share in a building that costs hundreds of crore.

Promoters of these platforms say the rental return could be in the range of 8-9 per cent. Add the capital appreciation and the total IRR could rise to

The return is likely to be higher than from a fixed deposit. Says Shesh Paplikar, CEO & co-founder, BHIVE Alts: "The risk-reward in commercial real estate is much better than in residential real estate."

Parekh informs that the building is managed by the FOP and the entire investment process is online, making it a hassle-free investment. He adds: "Since the investment is made in a ready building, there is no development or approval risk. Even the tenants are already in place, which mitigates vacancy risk," he adds.

Lack of regulatory oversight

The primary risk in this mode of investment today is the absence of regulation. "Currently, the regulatory oversight over this sector is extremely limited," says Vedika Shah, senior associate, Pioneer Legal. Disclosure norms are also not in place. "The nature of disclosures related to valuation of real estate, property title diligence, terms of lease, status of lease renewals, etc.

according to Sebi's criteria

Sometimes, FOPs are floated by agents registered with state Real Estate Regulatory Authority (RERA). "While these platforms could be partly complying with RERA norms, such registrations don't imply end-to-end regulation of their activities by RERA," says Vimal Nadar, head of research, Colliers India.

Investors in many FOPs are considered as shareholders of a special purpose vehicle (SPV) which owns the asset. "Such SPVs require proper review, which may not be done currently by RERA," says Nadar. He adds that in other cases, the power of attornev (PoA) route is followed for owning assets, which is subject to misuse.

No proper mechanism for redress-

Investors could also face liquidity issues if they want to exit. "Since the units are unlisted, finding a buyer may not be easy," says Puri.

Do the due diligence

Before investing, an investor should evaluate the reputation of the platform and the expertise (including qualifications and experience) of the individuals running it. Parekh suggests checking how a platform's assets have performed in the past, and whether the management team is experienced at leasing and exiting properties.

Paplikar suggests going with a platform that has a competent team that understands the risk involved in the acquisition of a real estate asset, and is capable of handling them.

"If possible, connect with a few investors who have previously transacted on the platform to gain an understanding of its operating mechanism," says Puri.

Lodha suggests that investors should check to see if the platform has backing from institutional investors. He adds that investors should enter this investment avenue with at least a 7-10-year horizon.

If the FOP is registered as a private company, it would be required to file its books with the Ministry of Corporate Affairs (MCA). "Check those filings before investing," says Nadar.

How returns are taxed

Tax experts say there are no clear directions currently on how payouts from FOPs should be taxed. "Taxation will depend on how the ownership is structured," says Archit Gupta, founder and CEO. Clear.

"Where the ownership is structured in a way such that every investor is an owner and is mentioned in the property documents, rent income may be treated as interest and taxed at slab rates," says Gupta.

He further adds that when there is capital gain on the sale of a property, it would be treated as long-term capital gain and taxed at 20 per cent if the property has been held for two or more years. If it was held for less than two years, the gain would be taxed at slab rates applicable to the individual.

TRUTH BE TOLD

HARSH ROONGTA

Kirti, a selector, wants to make money by backing a batsman based on his long-term performance. After scrutinising the statistics of several batsmen over a hundred matches, he decides on one. However, he gets upset when his chosen player doesn't perform well in the next match, and in fact the entire series. He overlooks the fact that the other batsmen have fared equally hundred matches, Kirti's disappointment doesn't abate. He unrealistically expects the batsman he has backed to perform well every time, forgetting his initial strategy of backing a batsman based on his long-term performance.

Cut to investments. I narrated this imaginary story to our client Radha. She was going through the status report on her investments started six months ago. She expressed unhappiness at their rather low returns and enquired whether they needed to be replaced. I told her the performance statistics of her investments over six months were akin to data shown on the television screen while a match is going on — useful to know which way the match is going, but not useful for selecting a batsman.

Similarly, an investment's performance over six months is not a good basis for deciding to review the investments.

"Should we never review the performance of an investment then?" Radha asked.

"Of course, we should. But it needs to be based on its long-term performance data compared to peers. We had shown you data for the past 20 quarters for all the investments based on which this one was chosen. We have updated that data to reflect the quarters 21 and 22. The cumulative data from quarter 3 to quarter 22 continues to show the investment as among the top performers," I answered.

It was tough for Radha to understand why the investment status report was not a correct basis for reviewing her investments. But she had to agree in the face of the inexorable logic presented to her.

Radha said she now understood the difference between an investment status report and an investment review report. But what was the plan review document we were giving so much importance to? Again, using cricketing analogy, I explained: selecting a batsman based on his long-term performance (akin to investment review) is different from deciding the composition of the team — how many batsmen, all-rounders, bowlers, and the wicket-keeper.

risk-taking ability. An investment's Choosing the specific instruments or schemes within each performance is of these investment types based akin to data shown on a set of long-term criteria on TV during a comes next. A good plan will match – useful also consider the physical and to know which way emotional health needs of the the match is going, individual (just as in cricket one looks at the physical and mental well-being of the players). The plan review looks at all these parameters to take a call on whether any one of them needs an adjustment. Thus, in descending order of importance and impact on the success of any plan would stand the initial plan and review, initial investment selection and review, and ongoing investment status reports.

My favourite maths teacher in school had once remarked, with a mischievous smile, "I want each one of you to score above average marks." This, of course, is a mathematical impossibility.
